Colombo, Sri Lanka

There are three major institutions engaged in the teaching of Law in the country - the Faculty of Law in the University of Colombo, the Department of Law in the Open University and the Law College. Each of these institutions caters for a different group of persons. The Faculty of Law in the University of Colombo is the principal institution which offers an undergraduate training in Law. The students are selected on the basis of a competitive examination and are normally between the ages of 18 and 23. The Open University has a different objective. The criteria for entrance are less rigid and the institution offers those whose education has been interrupted an opportunity to obtain a training in Law. The institution also affords an opportunity for the employed and for those with adequate grades who may have been excluded by the University of Colombo which has a limited number of places available. Much of the instruction in the Open University is by correspondence and through the mass media, although face to face instruction is also now used. The aims of the Law College are different. The course of study it offers is directed towards producing litigation lawyers and the emphasis is less on legal theory. Civil and criminal procedure, conveyancing and drafting form an integral element of the course. There is little emphasis on comparative law, legal theory etc. (See Annexes I and II for undergraduate enrollment in the Faculty of Law, University of Colombo and the Department of Law in the Open University of Sri Lanka).

UNDERGRADUATE COURSE STRUCTURE IN THE FACULTY OF LAW, UNIVERSITY OF COLOMBO

The Faculty offers a four year course leading to the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Both the Roman Dutch Law and the English Law are important sources of the Sri Lankan legal system which is a typically 'mixed' jurisdiction. The course has as its primary objective that of ensuring that the law student acquires a sound grasp of the 'core' legal subjects in a historical and comparative context. Instruction is provided by the small nucleus of permanent staff members, most of whom have been trained in western universities and by various members of the official and unofficial bar. The lecture method is traditionally used with tutorials, seminars and discussions forming a component of the teaching methods. More recently the Faculty has embarked on the imparting of skills required for the practice of Law through the medium of advocacy workshops offered as a non-credit earning course at final year level. Students are taught by practitioners and judges who teach them the essence of courtcraft. Undergraduates are expected to know the major developments in the legal system of Great Britain and South Africa.

In some areas of the Law where codification has taken place, students are exposed to materials in jurisdictions where similar codes are found - particular in the Commonwealth jurisdictions. (See Annex III for course structure in the Faculty of Law, University of Colombo).

COURSE STRUCTURE IN THE OPEN UNIVERSITY

The Department of Law at the Open University, like the Faculty of Law in the University of Colombo, attempts to give a student a sound grasp of the core legal subjects in a four year course leading to the degree of Bachelor of Laws. A few differences are that the law relating to Landlord and Tenant is taught as a complete course at the Open University while it forms a component of the Property course in the University of Colombo. The University of Colombo offers a separate course in the special local laws while the Open University introduces the student to the local laws via a number of courses. The law relating to Public Corporations forms an important element in the course on Administrative Law in the Open University. In the University of Colombo Local Government Law forms a vital component in the course on Administrative Law. The student receives no more than an introduction to the Law of Public Corporations. Despite these differences in essence the course structure of the two institutions is similar.

COURSE STRUCTURE OF THE SRI LANKA LAW COLLEGE

A three year course of study is offered by the Sri Lanka Law College. On the successful completion of the course of study and a period of apprenticeship the candidate is enrolled as an Attorney-at-Law. The course is geared for the needs of the practitioner-to-be. There is considerable emphasis on procedural laws. Thus, subjects like Civil Procedure and Criminal Procedure receive detailed treatment. The student must also pass subjects such as Book Keeping, Trust Accounts and Professional Ethics. The staff of the College consists mainly of practitioners who teach part-time. The College, situated as it is in the heart of the judicial offices and courts, affords ample opportunities for clinical training and students are encouraged to follow trials. Moot courts and mock trials are conducted regularly (see Annex IV for course structure).

POSTGRADUATE TEACHING

Only the Faculty of Law, University of Colombo, offers opportunities for postgraduate study. Courses leading up to a Diploma in Law and a Masters degree in Law are currently offered. Two types of Masters degrees are available. In the course-work Masters degree a student follows a programme of lectures for one year. At the end of the course of lectures he is required to sit for an examination. In addition he must produce an extended essay under supervision. A Masters degree by research is also offered. To qualify, a student must present a thesis and satisfy the examiners at a viva voce examination. A Ph.D by research is also offered. The course-work Masters degree, up to now the most sought after postgraduate programme, is offered in different areas of the Law depending on need and expertise available. Courses on the Law of Evidence, Constitutional and Administrative Law and International Law have been offered. More recently the Fullbright programme which sends scholars from US Law schools to Sri Lanka for a year has enabled the Faculty to offer courses in International Economic Law and International Trade Law and Practice. It is anticipated that these courses in time could be taught entirely by Sri Lankan academics and lawyers. The postgraduate courses and in particular the Masters programme attract a substantial number of members of the judiciary, the official and the unofficial bar. While there is a high concentration of Magistrates and High Court Judges whose work is essentially in Criminal Law the courses have also attracted Judges of the Court of Appeal, the second highest court in the country. These courses then have significant impact on providing the legal profession with the opportunity of exposure to current developments in the Law and satisfy a demand for continuing legal education hitherto not available in the country. The Faculty is now thinking in terms of short courses and seminars during the vacation on new trends in different areas of the Law. The method of treatment would be comparative. This would be particularly beneficial for the outstation practitioner who has little access to books, periodicals, etc. Steps have already been taken for the Faculty to work more closely with the Judges Institute recently formed with the objective of catering for the particular needs of the Judges to discharge their functions more effectively. (See Annex V for postgraduate enrollment in the Faculty of Law, University of Colombo).

INTRODUCTION OF INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY LAW AS A SUBJECT

It is felt that Intellectual Property Law could be introduced in all three legal institutions.

In the Faculty of Law the subject could be introduced at undergraduate level as part of the course on the Law of Property. The Law of Property is also taught at Diploma level where there could be further exposure to the subject. It should be noted that the Diploma is the only course available to legal practitioners without a degree. There is also the possibility that it could be offered at Masters level if the necessary expertise is available. In the Open University and the Law College, too, the Law of Property is taught and a new component must surely be that of Intellectual Property.

CONSTRAINTS ON THE TEACHING OF INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY LAW

In all three institutions the main constraint regarding the introduction of Intellectual Property Law as a subject is the lack of trained staff to teach the course. The incentive for young lawyers to take to teaching are few. All three institutions are therefore inadequately staffed. There is, moreover, a high turnover of staff which affects the continuity of ongoing courses. Opportunities for postgraduate study abroad too are limited, competition for the government scholarships being considerable. The Faculty of Law in the University of Colombo is now investigating the possibility of a link programme with the University of Windsor in Canada. An exchange of scholars for periods up to a year is visualized. Sri Lankan academics will be encouraged to follow courses at Windsor in areas not included in our curriculum with a view to introduction of new courses at undergraduate and postgraduate level. The Asia Foundation, too, offers financial assistance for teachers who have been accepted for postgraduate training in an American University. More and more teachers then will have opportunities for short spells of training in other Law Schools enabling them to gather some expertise and materials for improving the curricula in the Faculty.

Another drawback is the unavailability of an adequate library. While the University library is sufficient for the purposes of undergraduate teaching in the traditional "core" legal subjects, it is inadequate for the purposes of teaching the newer legal subjects. Steps will have to be taken to build up such a collection. The Faculty has in the past obtained assistance from the Asia Foundation and the British Council to build up its collection. The Government of the Netherlands, too, has rendered valuable assistance. Once adequately trained members of the staff join the cadre, it should be possible to build up the necessary collection within a period of about a year.

Access to legal materials in Australian Universities has been secured through institutional and personal contacts. Links with other libraries may be established in the future. Initially, photocopied materials may have to be used. This was done in two courses currently offered by the Faculty - International Trade Law and Practice and International Economic Law. Steps have now been taken to build up small collections in these areas of the Law.

CREATING AN INTEREST IN THE SUBJECT OF INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY LAW

Apart from the University of Colombo, the Open University and the Law College other institutions and bodies can be identified to create an interest in this field of the law. The legislature in 1979 introduced a Code of Intellectual Property. In the seven years that have elapsed there has been little activity in this area of the Law. It is significant that in 1986 two cases on intellectual property reached the Court of Appeal. Seminars and discussions conducted by the country's Law Commission and the newly formed Judges Institute may well create a further interest in the subject.
